CAPTAIN KIDDER.

The young ambitious Saptain Kidder was busying himself looking over the pracious charts of his great uncle Old Kid himself. It seems that the Old Kid had long ago won both fame and fortune, then buried it away just before he died.

Fortunately the young Kidder was fairly good at mathematics and was already a junior in the local school, so he easily "dopes" out the various paces to reach the possible treasure. And even more fortunately, as it always happens in the movies, all of Old Kid's intricate figures were correct, which brought Kidder's search to a quick climax and he was rewarded with a great big and well-aged bone.

Kidder took the bone and rushed right over to the Dizzy Dog Cafe to enjoy a real feed. Things went well until a few other local shieks of Dogtown dropped in to sound their "A's" on the soup. Captain Kidder had no appreciation for music and began to upset the calmness of the place by squeezing the juice from a nice fat grape fruit in the eyes of the two offenders. It was fortunate that doctor Kat was close by to wash the sore eyes, but even then the Kidder hindered even that by putting soap in his eyewash.

About this time little Mollie Mouse, a local girl, that had come back from Broadway, was out with her bicycle. Everything went well until she began speeding and runs into a big black hog, and the machine becomes fastened to the hog. With full speed ahead the whole procession headed right for Captain Kidder. He skillfully leaps up onthe hog and loosens the machine which causes the mouse and a few stray cats to take a mighty tumble. The onrushing hog takes a short cut and spills Kidder into the Big river. Down underwater he disturbs roughboy shark and trouble starts. It is only after a long swin that he is rescued at the edge of the lake by a long rope thrown by a few former friends. Kidder is hauled up to the top of the cliff and held up while everybody has a good laugh at him, then the rope is out and he drops to do battle with the shark again. If he is still alive he is sure his old friends mustthink "Revenge is sweet."
